What do construction workers use to get to the top of a building that doesn't have their elevator installed yet? They use buck hoists.

Buck hoists are lifts that are usually outside a building. Instead of traction or hydraulic systems, they use a rack-and-pinion system. That means a circular gear climbs a straight gear. (see top right)

They can go up to 1,000 feet and travel up to 300 feet per minute, so maybe we should call them sloth elevators!

OTHER NAMES FOR BUCK HOISTS:

- Construction hoists
- Material hoists
- Man-lifts
- Construction elevators
- Material lifts
